I believe the Internet needs to remain free for all..... I understand the need to make money out of actual physical products however, making money of articles, research papers, and information is just simply being mean. How can you put a price on giving information that can help someone learn and become a better person or succeed in something... How can I put a price on reaching out to people and improving their lives and pushing them forward without having to worry about what they need to give in return

I believe if we set a rule that supports students, people with learning difficulties, and anyone who just wants to gain knowledge for free; we will get more rewards than plain money..... We will help build communities, a generation where sharing is king and information is power. We will grow givers who believe in paying back all those who helped them reach so far... We will make a community that thinks first about the effect of their actions and if they will make a difference on someone's life....

I believe many would consider me a dreamer and ignore this message all together as it's not new Well, it isn't ... Those who created the Open Source movement know what I am talking about. They fight a war among all those giant companies who continue to make billions and billions from selling information, and vital learning software tools to people who usually can not afford it and spend precious time trying to look for alternative tools they can afford.... Well I stand for those people those who just want to learn and can not afford it....
